Welcome to BURRITO Magazine! A new year has arrived and we're right on time... late.

All's well though. This issue brings precious gems to either tickle your funny bone or tickle your fancy or tickle elsewhere. We don't care where it tickles, we're just in the business of tickling. And speaking of business, this is a perfect time to give an annual report for the year of 2009! We're proud to say that we're right on track financially. Please review the following numbers:

Income

Advertising Sales	$0.00
Magazine Sales	$0.00
Other income	$0.00
	$0.00

Expenses

Printing	$Lots
Salaries	$Are you kidding?
Contributors Pay	$No dough
	$Ha!

Bottom Line $FR.EE

As you can see, we're exactly where we need to be. Would we like to make millions of dollars with this publication? Only if it involves the same amount of work on our part without having to sell ads. If you know any rich folk who suffer from the debilitating disease of wanting to flush money down the toilet, please network us with them. We may take the money off their hands. Or we may just go over and flush our money down the toilet with them since that's what we do now.

In this issue, you will find a new addition: The Poetry Page. Yes, like any small-time zine, we are compelled to include poetry on our pages. But don't be fooled by the fancy word "Poetry." Our poetry is just as goofy as our other stuff. That doesn't mean you can't memorize it and recite it to beautiful women in an attempt to woo. We encourage such. Just remember to ask her if she flushes money down the toilet.

What else... We'll see the final pages of Episode #2 of Attack Mimes. There's also a piece on space travel. And there's a hippie on the cover. That about sums it up.

Enjoy!

Jason Salas, Editor at Moderate Size

HEART WORD LIMERICK

I SPOKE FROM THE VOICE OF MY CHEST, & REGRETTED THE WORDS I EXPRESSED.
I FOUND OUT MUCH LATER,
REGRET IS FAR GREATER,
WHEN WORDS OF THE HEART ARE SUPPRESSED.

NIGHTTIME INVITETIME

MY NIGHTTIME,
IS COUPLED WITH WINE,
I'D LIKE YOUR NIGHTTIME,
TO BE COUPLED WITH MINE.
THE THREE OF US,
WOULD GET ALONG FINE.

SIMPLY STATED

WASTE NO WORD,
GET MESSAGE HEARD.

2010: The Year We Make Another Movie About Making Contact

By Jason Salas

Like most people, I saw the movie “Avatar” and drooled over the astonishing special effects. I marveled at the fact that a movie like that could even be made. But it just occurred to me that the forecast was not that in 2010 we would not be just watching movies about making contact but actually making contact. Hence the title of the film “2010: The Year We Make Contact.”

So why have we not made contact? I see three reasons:

1. We don’t have adequate spaceships technology
2. We don’t have enough fuel to propel the spaceships we don’t have the technology to build
3. We don’t know where to look

Note: Some folks argue that we don’t have enough money to fund space travel. This is a silly notion. It’s not like money is some sort of scarce element that needs to be mined (Avatar reference). If an alien ship were to visit earth and drop $100 trillion dollars out of the sky, it wouldn’t advance space travel research but would only screw up the value of the dollar [even more so]. But then if an alien would do that, we would have essentially made contact and thus negate the need for money to do such. Ain’t that a rub.

For now, let’s just unpack the three reasons:

Reason #1: We don’t have adequate spaceship technology. We think that, as earthlings, we’re so intelligent that we want to find more intelligent life to invite to dinner parties and collectively complain about the state of the universe and impress each other with stories of vacations on distant planets. But we’re not that intelligent. We can’t even go to other planets in our own solar system. This is a case of sociological survival of the fittest at the galactic level: if we can’t figure out how to get invited to the party, we don’t belong there. Also, we can’t borrow dad’s car in this case so, oh well.

Reason #2: We don’t have enough fuel to propel the spaceships we don’t have the technology to build. Even if we had a spaceship that could make the flight, how is it powered? To haul enough rocket fuel to get us to another solar system would require a spaceship too big to power it with mere rocket fuel. And we can’t use solar panels because we’d be flying away from the sun. We need something that can get us up to the speed of light and keep us there for years. Did somebody say “warp”? If we can’t even figure out how to build the ship, what makes us think that we can somehow figure out how to warp space and time? And if we could, how would we know our ship could handle it? One galactic “flat tire” and we’d be done for. Who would we call for help? There are no cell phone towers in space and I’m pretty sure AAA doesn’t service that sector.

Reason #3: We don’t know where to look. This is by far the biggest reason. Why build the ship to begin with if we don’t know where to point it? Space is big. It’s not like going to the mall to find a nice pair of pants, we can’t just browse around. And what if we found a planet with “intelligent” life on it? Think about how we find friends now. We don’t randomly knock on peoples’ doors in hopes that the guy who answers shares our particular hopes and dreams. He may be some psycho who’ll shoot us with his shotgun for being on his property. Imagine that at a planetary level.

Do I want to find intelligent life on other planets? Not really. There are intelligent beings on this planet I have yet to meet. And, to be honest, the movies about making contact are fun and fill that curious void. And also, if I’m being honest, I think alien life might smell like body odor.
